Manager's Comment

After a complicated September, equities reached new highs in October: S&P500 recorded +6.91%, Nasdaq 100 +7.90% and Euro Stoxx 50 +5.00%. The increase in sentiment was certainly highlighted by earning season: according to Factset, of the 56% of companies in the S&P 500, around 82% reported actual profits above the estimates (five-year average of 76%). Leading the growth are the sectors Real Estate, Comm. Services, Health Care, Financials and Info. Technology.

In macroeconomic terms, CPI YoY increased (5.4% vs. 5.3% survived and 5.3% prior) while the US economy grew at a 2% rate in Q3, which turns out to be the slowest growth in the pandemic era, undoubtedly caused by supply chain issues and a marked deceleration in consumer spending (which grew only 1.6% after increasing 12% in Q2) that halted the expansion. Growth stocks performed better than value stocks in October generating a growth of +4.40% (calculated as Growth stocks/Value stocks of the S&P 500). The FED reassured the markets by confirming that its accommodative policy will be withdrawn gradually and, assuming that the program will be completed by mid-2022, a first rate increase is possible by the end of next year: the dot plot forecast in fact increased in June.

In this context, we remained under-invested, making no major changes to the asset allocation: the total equity component at the end of the month is around 48%. Equity hedging operations were carried out between 10 and 20%, lowering the equity component in the days close to the Fed meeting. Finally, currency hedging transactions were carried out on EUR/USD at 25% in order to mitigate risks and benefit from the depreciation of the dollar at levels between 1.17 and 1.15.

Despite equities at record levels, it is possible that November will lead to new highs with the rest of corporate earnings and the upcoming Christmas season. Markets seem to be optimistic despite the fact that there are still several reasons to be cautious about the short-term outlook: Covid, employment, inflation, tapering, supply chain and energy crisis are among the main ones. In this context, we are starting to accumulate positions in a gradual and prudent manner, continuing to focus on well-diversified portfolios, both in terms of geography and asset class, favoring quality stocks first and foremost.
